Project managers are in charge of project planning, execution, and monitoring. They are accountable for the project's scope, the resources, the budget, and the project's success or failure. To keep the team aligned, having a good project manager is a must.

The future demands highly skilled project managers to efficiently manage the team, the process, and the entire business environment with effective risk management practices. In such a scenario, a project management certification is the value addition you can surely go for. Whether you choose a PMP certification online or a project management training or a particular institute, your leadership qualities and skills will be polished efficiently, giving you the necessary competitive edge amongst your peers. On average, a PMP certification cost ranges from $405 to $555, based on your membership.
